45. Mango and Mahua plantations.—Only 1274 mango and 1618 Mahua trees have survived out of the last year's plantations. Out of this year's plantations 18,990 mango and 32,824 Mahua plants are reported to have survived. This is due to the good rains during the year under report, as also to the fencing of the plantations with Thoor hedges, introduced the year before last.

46. Grass and Fodder.—Out of the closing balance of 464,083 Pulas in village ricks by the end of the last year, only 149000 have remained ; while in the State ricks, kept for the use of the stables, the number of Pulas is 600,000.

47. It is to be much regretted that the arrangements, introduced some time ago as a precautionary measure against an year of scarcity for the preservation of grass and fodder, have not proved popular. It seems the Revenue officials have not interested themselves in this most important question, as they ought to; nor do they seem to have understood His Highness' orders in this matter, which means that every Asami should collect 300 Pulas annually. It is hoped that in future this will be made clear to the people and the Revenue Department will insist upon the strict observance of the orders, which are for the benefit and good of the people themselves.
